

Individuals needed for a research study at Boston University.

Boston University's Center for Psychiatric Rehabilitation is conducting a research study involving peer-providers' experiences of recovery.

We want to know if you are interested in participating

Who can participate?

- People working at least two years as peer-providers in the field of mental health.
- People willing to be interviewed about their recovery and life story.

What does it involve?

- Answering questions about your life history and recovery processes.
- Participating in two research interviews, each 60 minutes long.
- Completing self-report questionnaires at home.

What are the benefits of participating in the research study?

- The study can tell the mental health field what the benefits of working as a peer-provider are and highlight the importance of incorporating peer-providers within the mental health system.

Compensation and Other Information about the Study

- You will receive $20 for each interview and $10 for filling-out questionnaires.
- You will receive $10 payment if you decide not to complete an interview.
- We will maintain the confidentiality of the information you provide
- Your participation in the study is completely voluntary
